

Common Roots Farm

CSA share #15: week of September 16, 2019

It's Week #15 of our CSA venture to bring healthy food and beautiful flowers into your home! We hope you are enjoying our first season of providing you with fresh, nutritionally dense produce and our beautiful, organically grown flowers. As always, if you have comments for us, please let us hear from you at CSA@commonrootsfarm.org.

Today's farmer of the week is Tomoko, who has been one of our volunteer florists for two seasons now. Originally from Japan, Tomoko learned her flower craft there and then brought her skills to our farm after our founder, Heidi, met her in an online flower production course. Being skilled in both flower growing and arranging has made Tomoko a huge asset on our farm. Organic, locally grown flowers are hard to come by and our farm is working hard to specialize in this product. We enjoy the colors and pollinators that come to our farm as a result of growing a large variety of flowers and we hope you are enjoying them, too. We are grateful to Tomoko and our other florist, Norie, for all their help and we love how our CSA bouquets make our Tuesdays and Fridays so gorgeous!

This week's CSA share includes a market bouquet, a head of butter lettuce, pac choi, a pint of strawberries, a quart of mixed tomatoes, a bag of pole beans, and a zucchini. The farm is producing well these days and we are glad to offer more than we will likely be able to do in the coming weeks, as our season winds down. We hope you enjoy your share of Common Roots Farm! Please offer any feedback or questions to us at:

CSA@commonrootsfarm.org

Thank you!